Kim Jones, the British king of men's fashion, on taking over at Dior: 'It's the pinnacle of Paris'

For convenience-ready millennials

Audio pioneer SVS has applied the latest wireless connectivity tech to speakers for those who want more than is offered by the horde of entry-level models. A design for the real world, it delivers great sound quality and a host of features, in a package combining room-friendly-dimensions with looks which won't give your decorator a case of the vapours.

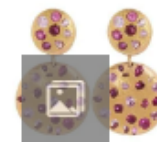

Called the SVS Prime Wireless Speaker System, it provides advanced wireless operation in a set-up that doesn't forget decent stereo imaging. This is what separates real hi-fi from mere noise, so the system has two speakers, although you can run a single, mono set-up.

The rise and fall of Nirav Modi: how the celebrated diamond jeweller became 'the biggest fraudster in Indian banking history'

Its on-board amplifiers deliver 200W, with digital processing and an audiophile-pleasing 192kHz/24-bit DAC. Wireless connectivity is via Wi-Fi, what SVS calls “Critical Listening Mode” for the highest sound quality, Bluetooth for wireless streaming from iOS or Android smartphones or tablets, as well as hands-free voice control via Amazon's Alexa.

There's more: the DTS Play-Fi platform gives users direct access to Spotify, Amazon Music, Tidal and myriad other suppliers, streamed directly from one's Wi-Fi network with no need for a mobile device connection. The DTS Play-Fi app also enables sound distribution to as many as 32 different devices in 16 zones.

All of this is housed in a pair of handsome, gloss-black enclosures, each fitted with a sleek aluminium dome tweeter and a 4.5in mid/bass driver. From £699, svsound.com

For budding David Baileys

With the Leica M10's bulk and weight enough to deter those who need something “pocketable”, the Leica CL is the ideal alternative – especially if your snapper owns a few M-series lenses: there's an adapter to enable their usage on this more bijou device.

In time for Christmas, Leica has released the Leica CL Street Kit consisting of a black Leica CL camera body with a ASPH lens, handgrip, leather carrying strap and spare battery.
